

Webmaster's Report for 40TH AGM 2024

I wrote the report for the 39th AGM as Acting Webmaster and sadly, a year later, I am still standing in in the absence of a permanent Webmaster.

On a more positive note, there have been major developments in the website this year. The format of the website has been much improved with a newer version and we have gained two important additions. Randle Holme's 17th century work 'Academy of Armory' is now available on the website with illustrations of tools and household items in use at the time.

Also we have the first part of the Richard Filmer Archive with over 500 photographs now on the site and many more to follow as they become available. There are around 6000 photographs in all.

We are trying to keep the website updated with new articles, news of future events and other items of interest. As with other information sources, we can only publish what we know about and we do need all of you to help by providing material. There are links on the website to a large number of museums and other societies but some of the information is out of date and we need to be kept aware of changes.

The website is there for your benefit as members but is also an important tool for attracting new members to TATHS. To be of value in doing that it does need to be kept supplied with new information.

Please help by sending material to webmaster@taths.org.uk
